Maxwell Cofie

Founder of Stage 2, The Good Seed Capital and Sandbox Réseau

Accra, Ghana · Say it: MAX-well KOH-fee

Maxwell Cofie is an Accra-based founder working across product, capital and community in Africa's tech ecosystem. Through Stage 2, the product studio he founded, he has spent more than eight years building digital products and launching ventures across fintech, legal-tech, events, commerce and proptech in Ghana. He also founded The Good Seed Capital, which connects early-stage African founders with global investors, and Sandbox Réseau, a builder community in Accra and home of The Reverb podcast.

TOPICS

Building for how African markets actually work

Why products copied from Silicon Valley stall here, and how to design around real-world friction: payments, trust, informal networks and the way people actually get things done.

Designing products people love

What makes users say "they thought about me", and how small, deliberate details turn a working product into one people recommend.

Telling the story that wins the room

Why great African startups still lose investors and customers, and the stories founders need to tell to close the gap, from the first pitch to the fundraise.

Building communities of builders

Lessons from starting Sandbox Réseau and The Reverb: how to bring founders, engineers and curious minds together, and keep the room worth coming back to.
